IMPART APPETITE.

Dr. Tutt has succeeded in combining in these pills the most powerful analgesic quality of a cathartic, the effect of a purgative, and a refreshing tonic. Their first apparent effect is to increase the appetite by causing the system to assimilate food more readily. Thus the system is nourished, and by its tonic action on the digestive organs, regular and healthy evacuations are produced.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE these pills under the influence of these pills is so rapid that the body, hence their effect, is a very subtle, and yet a very delicate, melancholy, dyspepsia, waiting for the removal of the cause of the ailment, the sluggishness of the liver, the torpid condition of the bowels, and the impairing habits of the system. It is a very subtle, and yet a very delicate, melancholy, dyspepsia, waiting for the removal of the cause of the ailment, the sluggishness of the liver, the torpid condition of the bowels, and the impairing habits of the system.

THE EGYPTIAN LIVER PAD

FEVER AND AGUE

—AND—

LIVER PAD

CURES CATARRH.

CANTONERS, Ohio, March 24, 1876.

DEAR SIR—Please send me one of your Egyptian Liver Pads.

I was one all winter and like it first-rate. I think by using one or two more I will get my bowels and the Catarrh for three years. Since I commenced wearing the Pad I am improving rapidly.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM MILLER,
Cantoners, Seneca Co., Ohio.

FRANCIS FITZGERALD,
BUMBERTON, April 15, 1876.

EGYPTIAN LIVER PAD CO.—Gentlemen: I have been using one of your LIVER PADS since the 20th of March. It has performed its duty on me. I have the liver and kidneys were in a bad condition; I had the itching piles and stoppage of water, with Sciatic Rheumatism, and was taking all kinds of trash. I sent for a Liver Pad and am quite taking all goods. My system is all right now, and my water is clear as crystal before it was thick and muddy. I could not rest any day all night now. I lived twenty years in Temperanceville, formerly; we send our butter and eggs to Dorchester Bros., Thirty-sixth ward. I want to get one-half dozen of your PADS. If you write a note to Dorchester Bros., right away, so they can get the Pads and send them out on Friday.

I am yours, respectfully,

interested in the races; in short, he liked being in London at this time of the year, and he can't bring anywhere else in Europe, and he felt a sort of boyish satisfaction in assuaging Glendening's jealousy to the utmost by constant offers of attention to the young wife.

It was the middle of July, Hugh's business was concluded, and he took Agnes to France and Switzerland for a month, but the two were no longer on terms of affectionate intimacy. Hugh was still jealous, and regarded his wife's steady coldness as a proof of her peculiar hypochondria. On her side, she felt that to maintain a semblance of buoyant happiness when she felt so dejected at the way she had been outwardly treated, was to lessen her dignity as a woman. The two sailed from Havre for New York, and reached their home again on the seventh day out, when they were halfway across the ocean, Hugh Glendening was suddenly snatched. There was no trace of him on board the steamer, and he had finally concluded that the rash and overbearing young man had thrown himself overboard.

It was naturally the cruellest possibility for Agnes when she was forced to believe that her husband had committed suicide. She knew, however, that he was heartbroken by his coldness; again she again she had repulsed him when he had tried to have an explanation. Naturally, now that he was gone, all the generosity of his first love returned; she forgot his faults, and recalled only his virtues; he accused herself of cruelty and heartlessness, and sorrowed like the despairing widows.

It seemed natural, under the circumstances, that Agnes should not only mourn, but regret that she could not see her young husband, who had been taken from her only a few months after their wedding-day; she sorrowed a year, two years, three years; but by that time her mind began to make an effort to persuade her that it would be better to leave his long-past affliction. She was faithful and tenacious of impressions, but at the end of four years she had resumed her ordinary life in society, and began once more to mingle with the world. Her husband was more attractive than in her girlhood, and her story was too well known and created a touching interest in her youth and beauty. She had several admirers, and one of them, George Dana, retained till she did allow any one to come near her as a lover. George had, perhaps, always been fond of her; he was, at any rate, now ardently in love with her. Remembering as Agnes did poor Glendening's early life, and how much she had suffered as with some mental disquietude and outward struggle that she allowed herself to yield to the feelings that she could love again, and love her cousin George.

However, his courtship was so far successful, that Agnes, at last, seemed to consent when she had passed the fifth anniversary of her husband's death. That date, which was as to divide her old allegiance from her new one, was the 20th of August, 1867. They lived quietly in the pleasant country-house, George and Agnes, every evening, and Agnes rose when she heard the train whistling at the bend, and she did walk weak across the fields to meet her lover. Every one smiled, and she seemed to intend to accompany her. The family, consisting of her mother, and sister of Agnes, her three sisters, and four or five married sister's children, all sat on the piazza waiting for Agnes and George to return to tea.

"What," said Mary Holt exclaimed, "do you think Glendening were alive, I should say that was he?" and she pointed to a man who passed the house at a distance of some two rods, and who now at her exclamation lifted his hat and bowed at her. "That is he!" cried the mother, "that is he! what wonderful sensation in the air, and Mr. Holt sprang to his feet and went down to the gate; but he had vanished. The likeness to Hugh Glendening had been declared; not only his face, but his attitude, his manner, his very gait. It was as if it was Hugh Glendening himself. In another moment George Dana came running up, calling for help. He saw, he said, while crossing the fields to meet Agnes, seen her in conversation with a man, and he thought he recognized him, and who strode away on his approach, and when he himself reached her she had wound round away and was lying on the ground.

The trouble which now overwhelmed Agnes and her family was one of those real, unmitigated troubles which take all freshness out of life. Agnes, when returned to consciousness, declared that while she was crossing the fields her husband had suddenly started up and confronted a tree, caught by the trunk, fell, and tightly clutched, and said to her in a horrible tone, "Do not dare to marry that man!" and that she remembered no more until she opened her eyes and saw her husband standing before her, crying out upon the tender flesh, her ears corroborated her story. The family had all known a man who, if not Hugh Glendening, was his absolute likeness.

George Dana was the only one who could tell the truth about the matter; he declared it to be wholly impossible that Glendening should be alive; he himself had questioned the captain and officers on board the steamer after the suicide five days before. Everything pointed conclusively against the declaration of the man had been drowned. The steamer had been searched over and over; on the actual day of the disappearance they had not even sighted a vessel or a boat; thus it was clear that Agnes had gone to meet her husband, and had made a terrible and irrepressible decision. When confronted with the fact that they had all seen Hugh Glendening, he declared it to be a chance resemblance - that Agnes was disappointed in her expectations, and that her husband, by her disorderly imagination supplied her words she believed him to have spoken.

George, however, being broken-hearted at the failure of his engagement was not concerned to defend the man whom he despised. The marriage was given up, and advertisements were put in the principal newspapers for a year, imploring Hugh Glendening, if alive, to communicate with his friends, and finally, but not a word was received from him. Agnes was left to suffer the cruellest form of suffering—absence and dread and helpless and hopeless misery. Her past was embittered, and present she had none, and the future was full of dark forebodings.

Gradually, in two years, then three years, passed, every one says herself ceased to believe in the reality of the apparition which had startled them all that 20th day of August. And at times even she herself doubted the possibility of her senses seeing such a remarkable thing.

Hugh was still alive when these past eight years he had only once disclosed himself to the sight of any of his friends? When he might come and claim her because she had loved him, and he might come to have for lurking in shadow, only caring to overwhelm her when she made an effort at renewed ties?

George Dana naturally was not slow to help her in these questions and doubts; and he told her that there were many that instead of covering helpless before vague and nameless shadows in the darkness, she should resolutely go on and meet and crush and defy them. By this time, too, she was legally freed from her husband by the laws of her State; more than eight years had passed since his apparent death. Agnes was at last persuaded to end the long suspense. She suffered not only for herself, but for George, whose life she had devoted to him, and she determined to marry him privately from her sister's house in New York. Their plans were not discussed beyond the family circle; it was decided that the two should quietly walk out to the city church, and then as soon as they were alone, they would get married. Thus everything unpleasant would be avoided, and before consequences were faced they would be actually met and conquered.

The plan seemed destined to bring the happiest results. The next morning, Agnes quietly ate her breakfast, then went to her room and put on her bonnet to go out and be married. As she stood at the window drawing on her gloves a maid stopped suddenly

It would be patent to every thinking person, and fully those afflicted ones who have tried the remedy, or goods at cost establishments, that it is actually necessary to have an appliance suited to particular form of hernia and carefully adjusted one skillful in his profession, as it is that a hernia requires a special kind of applied skill and aid of an experienced surgeon. For these reasons we advise you not to be misled by peddlars of cheap and inferior instruments at grocery stores, or eat-tries. Using for their liability of infection they are willing to part with them at half price. But no matter how cheaply offered, they are comparatively worthless in any individual case, so much money thrown away. A learned expert of medicine and surgery whilst lecturing on hernia at medical college in Philadelphia, a short time ago, suggested the very great importance of the assistance accompanying the patient and supervised adjustment of the appliance, and advised, that was not possible, that they should be accompanied their patient to a person skilled in the application of such instruments. During the lecture he exhibited various trusses, and their merit, and of one particularly that he called frequently with very satisfactory results. He will be pleased to explain its advantages if you call on him.

ICEBERG has recently taken possession of his home, over McMillen's Carpet store, and has prepared formulae and corrected all errors of patterns of Trusses, Ladies' and Gent's Abdominal and Pelvic Supporters, Silt and Strain Stockings, Knee Caps, Ankle, Heel, Scarf, etc., and will guarantee on accurate fitting, all cases. Private consultations for Ladies, especially Lady M. at 1087 N. Market Street, hours—Daily, 9 A. M. to 6 P. M.; Sunday, 2 o'clock to 5 o'clock.

For rules for measurement, a pamphlet describing the various forms of Hernia and treatment, sent, mailed free on application. my377ha.
